MAJOR SAN FRANCISCO TRIBAL & AMERICAN INDIAN ART SHOWS
WILL AGAIN BE VIRTUAL IN 2022,
WITH PLANS TO BE BACK AT FORT MASON IN 2023

After a hugely successful first virtual show in 2021, the 36th San Francisco Tribal & Textile Art Show and the 38th American Indian Art Show / San Francisco will remain online February 18 through the 28th, 2022 given the uncertainty around COVID-19.

November 30, 2021: San Francisco, CA – The Annual San Francisco Tribal & Textile Art Show and the Annual American Indian Art Show / San Francisco will open virtually February 18 through 28, 2022.

"With an abundance of caution, we've decided to offer the shows only virtually again this year," said Kim Martindale, co-producer of the show. "We've upgraded the virtual platform so the user experience will be even better than last year's very successful first virtual show."

John Morris, the shows' co-owner along with Kim Martindale, added, "we're all striving to find creative ways during this time for our exhibitors and art lovers to connect with so much uncertainty at physical venues. We are looking forward to adding the live shows back in next year," he stressed.

Usually held at Fort Mason in San Francisco, COVID-19 caused the organizers to quickly take the shows online in 2021. It was a huge success—fairgoers from more than 35 countries signed on in droves to the virtual shows to see art on offer from more than 100 exhibitors, also from around the world. With many people now used to virtual fairs, and a robust marketplace for tribal art, show organizers predict even better virtual attendance this year.
